Lots of wood at the top; the water gets murky quickly and is often muddy. All the anchors are there, though some are placed in odd spots. The intermediate anchor at C73 is in poor condition. It’s better to go straight up from the chain at the top, like last time. It’s not very slippery right now. Watch out for falling rocks. (machine translated)

All the anchors are there. In some cases, they probably weren’t always found and were replaced with a second one. Take a close look—they might be hidden under the ivy. There’s a long rappel of 72 meters, but it has an intermediate belay point at 20 meters. Two rappels are in the stream, so they could become critical if the water level rises. Overall, however, two 60-meter ropes should be sufficient. (machine translated)
