Gear:

Summary: (machine translated)
A priori it looks like a simple descent if we trust the topo but it is very slippery and quite technical in its slopes and installations. Be careful not to be overconfident!
It is steep, with an atmosphere, a high flow in spring and a multitude of small overhangs to negotiate.

Hydrology:

Access: (machine translated)
We arrive at Saint Girons on the D117 and before crossing the bridge over the river Le Lez, at the traffic circle turn right onto the D618 to Castillon-en-Couserans. Continue on the D4 towards Bordes s/Lez and cross it towards Sentein, continue on the D4 until the end of Eylie and the "Parking du Bocard d'Eylie".

Approach: (machine translated)
We cross the bridge and continue along the track. When the track passes from one side of Le Lez to the other, soon we see the confluence with the stream of Urets and about 100m ahead a bridge to cross and climb the slope towards the Port d'Urets. After 160m of unevenness and a few zigzags the path approaches the creek. We enter

Tour: (machine translated)
After a few first pitches we start with the waterfalls that we will rappel. Here the descent is a little boxed in and gives it quite a bit of atmosphere. After finishing the rappel zone, we reach an area of cliffs and slides to face the last two waterfalls/rappels in a much more open area.

Return: (machine translated)
We cross Le Lez and retrace our path

Automatisch importiert von Descente-Canyon.com für Canyon Urets Torrent de montagne avec peu d'encaissement et quelques rampes à descendre en rappel. L'équipement est vieillissant mais ça fait le job. Enchainé avec le petit canyon de Rouge à Eylie d'En Haut : pas un grand moment de canyon mais le couleurs de roche et les jeux de lumière en sous bois valent le détour.
