We climbed all four sections today. For the SuSup entry, we chose the alternative route. The first two jumps went well. At the high rappel point, we replaced the missing anchor and set it up. Orthographically to the right. After about 15 meters, there’s another intermediate belay station. We recommend using this one due to a sharp edge. A very nice day trip; it took us about 10 hours, including breaks. The photos show the high rappel point, the entry, and a reference photo of the water level at the entry. (machine translated)

We only made the first 2 jumps. A very large scree avalanche comes into the canyon from the left side arm. No anchors to be found on the first rappel. We turned back due to the unclear situation. (machine translated)
