Summary: (machine translated)
Little known ravine and less traveled, especially by pollution and degradation generated by urban centers. It does not have big rappels except for the one at the final dam. Although some reviews point out the need for a combination of cars, there is the possibility of going up the path that is close to the ravine and that goes up from Enseu to Baen.
It can be a good option when the rest of the ravines in the area are overgrown.

Hydrology:

Access: (machine translated)
On the N260 going up from La Pobla de Segur towards Sort, just before reaching Gerri de la Sal at pk 295.
Take the detour to the right towards Baen. In the second right turn of this little road we have the detour to the left to Enseu, we will go along this track until the left fork that will take us up to Enseu, in the same fork we can park.
If we have an access car we return to the crossroads and continue towards Baén where we park at the entrance.

Approach: (machine translated)
With two cars we will leave by the street on the right that then heads north (Casa Cílio according to all maps) from here it only remains to descend to the ravine.
With only one car (see track) we have to look for the path that goes up the ravine by the path that goes to the orographic right, crosses the ravine and goes up to Baén.

Tour: (machine translated)
The first part of very short rappels and abseils, until we reach the dam area where we have the 3 longest rappels.

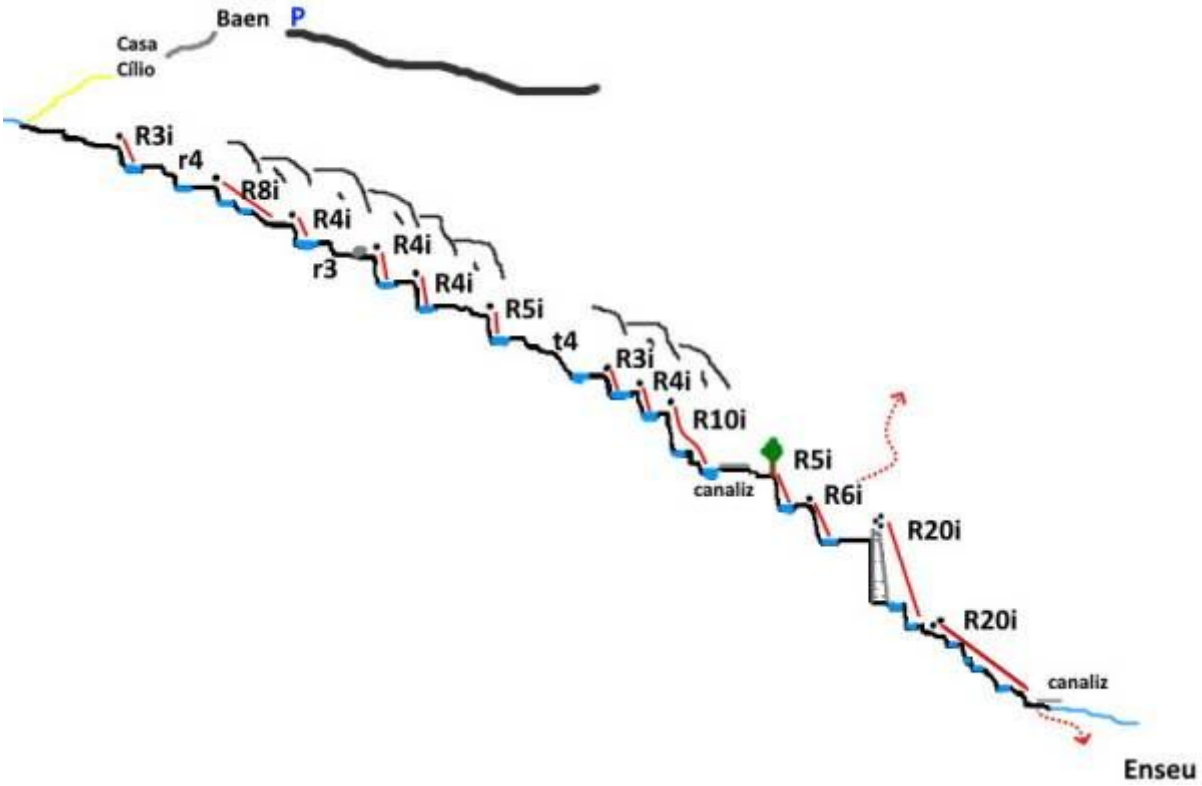

Return: (machine translated)
After the last rappel, through the canalization, we go out to the right to take the path that leads us to the same fork.
