Summary: (machine translated)
One of the most beautiful canyons i.d. Pyrenees; magnificent rock formations; should have made every canyoneers times; very grippy limestone; clean water; short rappel; very long walking and climbing passages; for the ascent much to drink with you; leave early; long access; many thorn bushes on the ascent; conditionally demanding; long time no emergency exit; exit before the 2nd part (Garanta Barrasil) li possible.

Hydrology:

Access: (machine translated)
From the village of Rodellar, park at the Mascun campsite.

Approach: (machine translated)
From the village of Rodellar take the footpath to the stream (Mascun) --> follow the stream upstream until you see the signpost 'Nassare' --> cross the stream to the left --> follow the path --> open area with further signpost 'Nassare' (right) --> long rock face --> follow the path over the high plateau to the next signpost --> to the left. ri. 'Nassare' --> follow the path until the village (small group of houses) Nassare becomes visible after approx. 2h --> pass it on the right --> after the village keep left at the fork in the path --> now descend through thorn bushes to the stream (depending on your pace another 30min-1h) --> follow the stream on the left bank to the entry point.

Tour: (machine translated)
When you arrive at the entry point, you immediately see gigantic, smoothly polished limestone slabs in the course of the stream --> a second tributary comes from the right --> one of the most beautiful canyoning tours in the Pyrenees begins right past the Steinmandl --> countless washed-out and smoothly polished pools with crystal-clear water follow in the upper third, which can be jumped, climbed around or swum through --> the gorge narrows continuously in the upper third --> you can't get out of amazement here because you can see so many different shaped rock formations and pools --> the entire gorge narrows continuously. in the upper third --> in the upper third the canyon narrows continuously --> here you can't stop being amazed as you can see so many different shaped rock formations and pools --> the rock is very slippery throughout the canyon --> most of the slides that look like they are more suitable for jumping or climbing --> the canyons are very narrow --> you can't stop being amazed as you can't stop being amazed as you can see so many different shaped rock formations and pools --> the rock is very slippery throughout the canyon --> most of the slides that look like they are more suitable for jumping or climbing --> the canyons are very slippery downclimbing --> the canyon is wide enough everywhere to be able to move easily --> at midday there is a beautiful incidence of light --> in the places where a jump is questionable, there is always the possibility of downclimbing --> several times there are large rock labyrinths which can be climbed around at the top or bottom --> the canyon can be climbed around the top or downclimbing around the bottom. from the middle section the canyon opens up again --> the grandiose scenic with the many beautiful places remains until the end --> don't forget that the canyon is very long and there is no emergency exit, therefore jumps should always be judged well --> once you have left the middle section behind you, the canyon narrows again --> longer walking and swimming sections alternate --> the final section extends over several 100m --> here you move almost exclusively in open, sunny terrain (streambed) --> at the final section of the Gorgas Negras there is a swimming section after which you find yourself on open terrain with a visible path (right.) and high narrow trees --> from here the following 'Garanta Barrasil' begins --> the red rock on the left side is clearly visible here --> the Garanta Barrasil is used by a lot of people --> the canyon is not so long, but also has very beautiful parts --> in the Garanta Barrasil you don't need a rope, but still have enough strength reserves to climb the next approx. 2-3h walking and climbing --> at the end of the 2nd canyon there is a beautiful 300m long swimming section --> after a short walking passages (right) you are in front of the stone bridge at the campsite.

Return: (machine translated)
The way back is via the steep campsite access road up to the road and on to Rodellar (approx. 1.5 km, approx. 45 min.)
