Specialities:

Gear:

Summary: (machine translated)
Its toponymy responds to the name of the area and the Piedras del Diablillo stream. Generally dry canyon except after heavy rains, with relatively simple rappels of up to 36m that we can use to start.
Comfortable access by track and similar return although it is possible to be shortened something atrochando.

Hydrology:

Access: (machine translated)
On the TF24, at km. 16,3
Access to Bcos Diablillo and Lere
On the right the Quimpi camp, on the left the track of El Centeno through which we will drive almost 1km to a barrier where we will park.

Approach: (machine translated)
Approach Bcos Diablillo and Lere
We will continue walking along the track towards the south. There are two branches, the one on the left, downhill, is where we will return, we go right gently uphill. After several curves we arrive at the ravine of Leres, we pass it and the next ravine is ours.

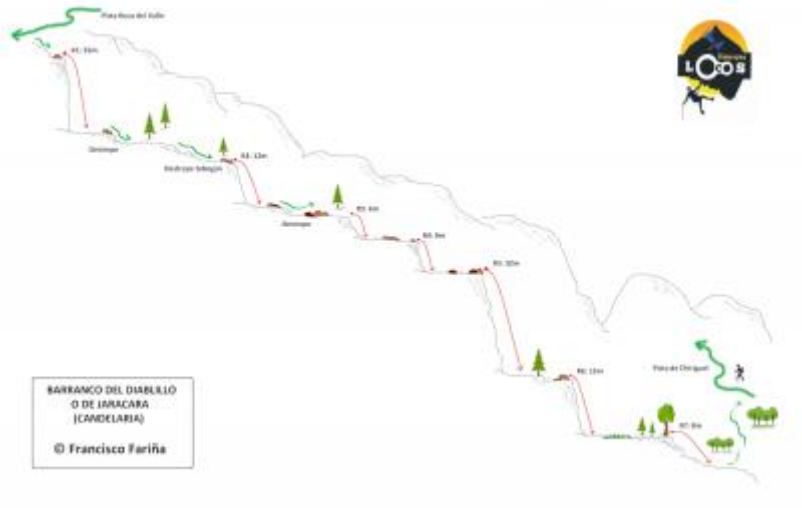

Tour: (machine translated)
See mole

Return: (machine translated)
After the last rappel, on the left there is a path with a lot of loose, somewhat exposed aculeus that in a moment leaves us on the track, we take it to the left towards the Leres ravine, soon we will cross it, just here we could make an atroche to the top of the track, if not we will follow it always ascending and to the left to go to stop at the place where we left the vehicle.
