Summary: (machine translated)
Canyon near Athens, but only relatively rarely visited. Probably without water flow from June.

Hydrology:

Access: (machine translated)
From Fyli, one of the northern suburbs of Athens, we head north towards the Moni Kliston monastery. After 2.9 km, i.e. before reaching the monastery, we turn left towards Filis Fortress. 4.8 km further on we come to a hairpin bend to the left, where we park our car (see google maps under Links).
If we have 2 cars, we can park one car for the exit at Moni Kliston (risk of burglary).

Approach: (machine translated)
We follow the hiking trail (according to Wikiloc under Links) to the stream crossing (entry).

Tour: (machine translated)
At the beginning hiking canyon, later in the incised area next to smaller rappels some jumps and slides.

Return: (machine translated)
Where we see a children's swing hanging from a tree in the bottom of the stream, we take the path out to the right and up to the monastery.
If we have only parked one car at the top of the road serpentine, it makes sense for the driver without luggage to pick up the car and the others with luggage to get in at the monastery.
