Summary: (machine translated)
A beautiful little alpine canyon. A few short rappels; scenic.

Hydrology:

Access:

Approach: (machine translated)
Easy access by bike to the reservoir. Then walk to the water intake—due to grazing livestock—and head up along the pasture fence, following no defined trail. From the lake, it’s about 30–40 minutes to the entry. The upper section is more for extending the hike.

Tour: (machine translated)
The lower section (with a possible intermediate entry point) is very impressive with its white marble and great rappels. The slides at the end of the 30-meter pitch are a bit tricky. Not very deep. All anchors are in good condition. Double anchors at the higher sections. One anchor added at a multi-pitch section. Rock with good grip. The 58-meter pitch at the end can also be downclimbed after 50 meters onto a ledge. A rewarding, secluded route.
