Summary: (machine translated)
Two parts of the same ravine, the first Pedregosa is the upper part, usually dry, or almost, except in the rainy season. The second Gritella we will find it usually with water.
Simple but very long descent

Hydrology:

Access: (machine translated)
We are located in the Siurana mountain range. We will go to Prades by the T704 from Capafonts.
In the p.k. 35,1 there is an open field on our right and a track on the left. We will go through here for 1km until a crossroads. We can continue straight on a little more until the Coll de l'Andreu or park here.
The car of return we will have to have left it in Siurana until where we will arrive by Cornudella de Montsant.

Approach: (machine translated)
From the coll we will take the track on the right to find the dry stream of our canyon and follow it to the first rappel.

Tour: (machine translated)
A first part of natural from trees in which we hardly find water. After this a stream on the right, generally dry and a small spring from which we may have a trickle of water. We will continue by an area of destrepes until the last rappel before arriving at the confluence with the bco Carcaix from here it is already bco Gritella and it can take something more of water.
A few small badinas before a dam and another longer badina to reach a small jump and the first rappel of this part. A couple more rappels to the final rappel. From here we will continue walking until the mill or we will go to the right to take the path/track that goes a few meters higher.

Return: (machine translated)
We will follow the track next to the Siurana until we reach a confluence of trails where we can turn right to go up to the village of Siurana where we have parked.
