| Summary: (machine translated) Short and relatively open gorge, south-east facing; something for collectors or as a complement to other canyons in the area. | | |
| Hydrology: | | |
| Access: (machine translated) Either from Mittenwald or Seefeld/Tyrol to Leutasch in the valley of the same name. From there along the Leutascher Ache upstream in a westerly direction to the hamlet of Klamm (about 2km). 400 m further on we come to the bridge over the Klammbach. Turn right before the bridge. We drive slightly uphill and park the car after 180 m at the edge of a larger open space. | | |
| Approach: (machine translated) We take the dirt road that leads us uphill in a northerly direction (signposts: "Wetterstein Hütte, Wang Alm, Puittal, Gehrenspitze"). We reach a hill, go downhill on the other side to a bridge and enter the stream a little below it. | | |
| Tour: (machine translated) A nice canyon hike follows with some minor rappels and a few downclimbs. | | |
| Return: (machine translated) At the exit of the gorge, take the path out over the steps to the left, past the wooden hut back to the parking lot. | | |
