This canyon was equipped many years ago; there have been no known ascents in recent years, and even though it was originally equipped with 10-mm bolts and ring-chain belay stations, it is unclear whether these anchors remain intact after the floods. If you plan to climb it, bring a drill and hardware. It features a nice sequence of vertical sections (up to 30 m), a few slides, and drops... in the final section, you'll need to tackle a long hike to get out, or you can continue on the lower Enderwasser, which is easier and shorter. The entire route is still time-consuming, however. (machine translated)
