Summary: (machine translated) In organizer circles called Krebsbach; this flows shortly above into the Lehnbach.pure rappel canyon, easy tour with little water, very sunny, therefore probably passable throughout the year, except when there is a lot of snow. Unfortunately, very heavily polluted and littered by waste / sewage from the heavily populated Mieminger Plateau.
Hydrology:
Access: (machine translated) From the Inntal freeway take the Mötz exit onto the main road in the direction of Innsbruck, at Stams turn left after the last house and drive in the direction of "Wasserfall". At the end of the road, park your car in the parking lot in front of the highway underpass.
Approach: (machine translated) Go through the underpass and over the suspension bridge to the northern bank of the Inn River and climb up on the hiking trail in the direction of Untermieming. After passing a chapel, immediately turn right at the edge of the meadow on a small path and continue along the edge of the forest down to the stream. (A little above on the left bank is the ruin of a mill).
Tour: (machine translated) A total of 15 rappelling points, some very far outside the actual streambed, with chain anchors and some wire ropes to get to the belaystation. However, it is possible to also follow the course of the stream in the lower part. The final waterfall is rappelled in two stages (otherwise longer ropes are needed).Above water diversion to a power station.
Return: (machine translated) Pass the power station on the right and take the footpath back to the suspension bridge and the car.

Canyon has changed a lot compared to 3 years ago, some stands would have to be renewed. Unfortunately a lot of garbage in the canyon :((machine translated)
