Summary: (machine translated)
Very mixed canyon character. In the upper part extreme tree blocking, in the lower part only rarely beautiful places, hardly rewarding. At normal water level extremely aquatic and very borderline. Only passable at extremely low water levels. According to a local, canyoning is prohibited in the Totes Gebirge nature reserve, and thus also the Vorderbach. This prohibition still requires more detailed research, however, I waive thereby for the time being on a more detailed description of the canyon and advise against a walk (also due to the moderate character).

Who is but times in the area should not miss the 22m jump in the jet-black Toplitzsee. You simply follow the footpath along the Toplitzsee in the direction of Vorderbach, until you come to a not overlookable slightly overhanging wall.

Hydrology:

Access: (machine translated)
From Bad Aussee drive in the direction of Toplitzsee until the exit.

Approach: (machine translated)
Follow the forest road, pass the fishing hut and follow the hiking trail until you reach a small bridge. Here you can check the water level. Follow the path, which becomes steeper and steeper (not marked in the ÖK) until you reach the Vordernbachalm. The entry is near the bridge over the stream.

Tour:

Return: (machine translated)
Exit at the bridge, from there back to the car.
