Summary: (machine translated)
Aquatic tour with beautiful parts but also many downclimb. The stream leads in early summer too much water for a safe walk.

Hydrology:

Access: (machine translated)
Coming from Belluno on the SS51 over the high bridge over the Piave gorge, then turn right towards Sottocastello and follow the road until a T-junction at a large parking lot. Here follow the road downhill to the right and after about one KM turn right (sign Al Lago). Cross the top of the dam and at its exit turn right. Follow the road until the bridge over the Anfela. More or less rock fall parking after this bridge. Coming from the north, you can reach Sottocastello by turning right towards Cortina after the tunnel under Pieve di Cadore and then taking the first turning on the right. If you have two cars, you can drive up the forest road after the dam for a few meters and then park on the left (saving about 1 km of flat walking). Continue only with off-road vehicles (deep grooves in the ground), but as of 2022 there was a sign prohibiting driving.

Approach: (machine translated)
From the dam up the forest road, after about 100-150m follow the trail to the left. After some time you meet again the forest road, follow this until you cross the Anfela. Then a short distance further uphill until a path on the right leads directly to the stream.

Tour: (machine translated)
The canyon has definitely been improved since the Cwiki description below (new anchors, no more tree abseils)
Status 2022
The first 2 belays on the right, under the bridge after a short walking passages there is an aquatic 25m rappel chain anchor on the right (anchor for safety rope to the belay available. Downclimb until you reach a low gorge, the anchor for the 10m rappel is hidden in the gap on the left. There are several downclimbs in the gorge and a 5m abseil from a hidden anchor on the right above the edge. At the exit of this gorge, you can climb very steeply to the left back to the forest road. After a longer section of walking and abseiling, the most beautiful part of the tour begins. Two 3m slides lead into a beautifully washed-out gorge with many small slides and 8 rappels up to 25m. Then there is a 4m jump (the only one of the tour), two downclimbs and some tricky downclimbs in the waterfall before you reach an arduous 30min downclimb section in open terrain. The canyon exits abruptly directly into the reservoir.

Return: (machine translated)
After the bridge, it is best to turn left up to the road

This gorge was re-routed during the third-level course; at the 3/4 mark, you must briefly leave the stream bed because, when the water level is high, a narrow channel forms beneath a rock and some logs. (machine translated)

All in all, a nice canyon. It’s very water-heavy and offers some interesting views, though unfortunately interrupted by stretches where you have to walk on the riverbed. There are a few handholds, but they aren’t always present. A few small mandatory Togoba sections. 0 dives, except from the bridge over the lake. (machine translated)

Automatisch importiert von Descente-Canyon.com für Canyon Anfela Some more bolts with this Waterflow would be nice. It's the second time we did the canyon, but it's not so nice because the walking sections after the beginning and at the end. The beginning is great, but then a lot of stream walking until the interesting part. Also at the end 25 minutes of stream walking and block climbing. The gorge could stand a few more stands, especially at this water level. Unfortunately quite slippery. (machine translated)
