Summary: (machine translated)
A small forest canyon that probably only makes sense on days when the weather is unpredictable due to thunderstorms.

Hydrology: (machine translated)
Very small watershed; running water is rare until just before the start.

Access: (machine translated)
There's plenty of parking up at Costa.

Approach: (machine translated)
Pass through Costa and follow the trail to Pizzo Ruscada until you reach the saddle next to P.971. From there, head toward the streambed and descend to the first gulch.

Tour: (machine translated)
At the start, the route follows a large crevice. Depending on the depth, the second person doing the rappel can jump from the pool.
After the crevice, follow the trail, as there isn’t anything exciting for quite a while. Waterfalls don’t reappear until the next trail crossing.
From there, there are a few scattered steps until you reach the narrowest part, directly beneath the main road.

Return: (machine translated)
After rappelling under the bridges from the main road and the train tracks, turn right at the little forest cabins and climb steeply up through the woods; this will take you directly to the old Borgnone train station.

Since most of the route involves downclimbing slippery boulders, we’ve gotten pretty creative about finding a way to jump or slide down every little depression. (machine translated)
