Coordinates are not very accurate.

There are three rappelling points. The first is easy; the second waterfall is the crux. There is a belay station on the left side. You have to cross the strong current and rappel down on the other side. Then you can swim behind the waterfall to the other side. You should follow the main current to avoid the undercut on the left side. You may be able to slide down the last waterfall.
This is followed by a short walk.

Return: (machine translated)
Exit via the path on the right. Go through the tunnel and back to the car.

Good trip. We started scouting everything from the bridge down. You can look in the canyon very well and assess the flow. It's 3 rappels. The first one is easy, the second waterfall is the crux part. There is an anchor on the true left. You need to cross the strong flow and rappel down the other side. Then you can swim behind the waterfall to the other side. Catch the main current to dodge the undercut on the left. We slide the last waterfall feet up. Then a short walk . We took the spur on the true right to get out. Through the tunnel and back to the car.
