Summary: (machine translated)
This rappel canyon is more for those who enjoy rappeling more than scenic attractions. It reminds more of a hike through a forest than a canyoning tour. The only highlight is the waterfall that falls right next to the road. Maybe interesting when there is a lot of water.

Access: (machine translated)
By car on the Westautobahn exit at Regau, continue in the direction of Salzburg and in Weißenbach (about 10 kilometers after Bad Ischl) exit in the direction of Postalm (toll road 30.- per car and 40.- per person). Park in the first sharp leftward haipin bend after the toll booth.

Approach: (machine translated)
Follow a forest road until you reach a junction where you continue to the left. At the Mühlaueralm, this branches into a wide footpath that rises to the right and a narrow footpath that branches off to the left through the forest, which you now follow uphill for about 350 meters. This path crosses the Toidlbach directly at the entry.

Tour: (machine translated)
The route is mostly well set up, but at some break-offs the belay is missing. Then you have to go into the forest and avoid the places.

Return: (machine translated)
When you reach the road, you can either return to the parking lot or rappel the last few meters after the bridge and reach a forest road on which you can turn left and return to the main road.
