Specialities:
Gear: Ropes: 2x 40m
Summary: (machine translated) Interesting, long tour that can be done soon after the rain.
Hydrology: (machine translated) At first there is not much water, but gradually more is added and the pools get bigger, so that some are also for slides or jumps.
Access: (machine translated) Park at Indemini or Daca.
Approach: (machine translated) It is recommended to have an offline map, as there is not good reception in the valley, and Swisstopo does not show all the paths there. If you continue Sci-aga, the official hiking trail bends to the left at a reservoir, which you follow until shortly before it goes back into the forest, at this point a path marked with blue dots goes up to the right to the entry of the second part of the canyon, starting at 1290m.
Tour: (machine translated) At the beginning quite blocky but still vertical, after that it becomes less interesting for a short time, but as soon as the Asino tributary stream joins in, the canyon's charm is back, as the pools finally become big enough to jump, and some waterfalls are quite shapely.
Return: (machine translated) After the confluence with the Giona, there is a 3m slide down and you walk about 100m. Then there are blue markings again that go up the slope back to Indemini. A very strenuous ascent.

Done only part 3, very nice and everything in order (machine translated)

Cool day, but quite long, just to get from Bellinzona/Locarno to Indemini you have to ride for almost an hour. Very slippery in places, so even quite small jumps suddenly become much more challenging than they look. Access to part 2 is surprisingly easy. (machine translated)
