Would be a nice canyon for beginners if it wasn't full of trees, because there hasn't been any major flooding here for at least 20 years. (machine translated)

Limestone, very rarely flooded, which is why dead wood is everywhere in the canyon.

At the Tine de Montbovon bridge, turn off onto the small road and then park immediately after crossing the Torrent des Riz.

The hiking trail leads fairly directly up to the start.

Right by the forest path at the top is a stupid downclimb that has also been set up. After that you walk for a while, the canyoning part is relatively short, at the exit you walk again for 15 minutes.

Go straight to the car at the small bridge.

Still a lot of wood and slippery. But hey, at least it's another creek you can do to avoid always seeing the same canyons. (machine translated)
