At the turn-off to the houses, walk down the slope and follow the streambed to the canyon. 10 min.

Tour: (machine translated)
It starts dry with a few steps to downclimb, then you reach the first belay on the right. Approx. 15 m. Some dry rappels follow, through a rock arch, a grotto. This is followed by the highest rappel at 35 m and a few pools that only make the rope massive. Then some rappels with water.

Return: (machine translated)
You can park at the canyon exit. Or you can hitch a ride to Upper Snake Canyon.

We parked at the Snake Canyon exit and had a local take us to the entry of Wadi Hatt (Seer). Great abseiling grotto, little water but most of the pools still had clear water. The local also pointed out that you shouldn't go all the way down the canyon to the wadi but should get out again after the canyon when it opens up to the road and not go down the last few meters in the stream because otherwise you would make the water dirty for the residents there. Then walk down the road for 5 minutes to the Snake entry and hang on to it. (machine translated)

Starts dry and has some pools further down, which are still quite clear. Wonderfully narrow canyon with beautiful tufa formations, a small grotto and a very nice ambience overall. (machine translated)
