Summary: (machine translated)
Relatively open canyon with 10 not too high rappels and not too long running routes. Facing northwest.
After reaching the Zwieselbach only hiking.

Access: (machine translated)
From the town center or Reutte train station, cross the railroad tracks in an easterly direction and take Mühler Straße to the metal works (at the same time in the direction of E-Werk). You cross the Archbach and drive on its northern side past the industrial plants. \We pass a parking lot on the righthand side and then turn right over the Zwieselbach bridge. Approx. 60m we go now in western direction and we cross the Archbach. Immediately after that we take a sharp left and after about 40m we come to a larger open space where we can park our car.

Approach: (machine translated)
We follow the forest road in the direction of Plansee/Stuibenfälle and cross at the power station to the other side of the Archbach. We come to a fork in the trail and follow the sign "Ministersteig-Plansee" uphill to the left. Where the path flattens out to the right after the steep climb, we leave it and take the path to the left that continues steeply up the ridge. At 1000m we meet a forest road and follow it to the left in a northeasterly direction.\nOnly slightly ascending we cross the Schlemstal at 1100m, then see the cascades of the Gehrebach on the slope on the other side of the Zwieselbach and finally reach the bridge over the Widdereggbach (entry, 1160m above sea level) via two more ditches. Beyond the bridge, the slope bends to the left and moves a few hundred meters in a northwesterly direction above the Widdereggbach stream along further in a northwesterly direction.

Tour: (machine translated)
After the access above the bridge structure, we quickly get to the first rappel. Then running routes and rappel alternate until we meet the Zwieselbach.
If we now want to attach the Gehrebach, we descend only a few meters in the Zwieselbach until we climb out to the right on the orographic right bank of the next side stream that flows into the Zwieselbach from the right.
About 5m above the Zwieselbach we cross horizontally in a westerly direction into the next cirque. There we cross diagonally right up to the sharp ridge. On this ridge we go up - partly a bit exposed (if necessary rope protection) - until we reach a small saddle on the right on a horizontal path dug into the slope. Here, do not descend to the right, but continue in the original direction of the previous ridge upwards to a slope, which we reach - possibly via a side branch.
On the forest road now left in western direction. We pass the Niederwaldalpe (on the left below). A signpost - "Reutte" - prompts us to take the path down to the left. Soon we come to the footbridge over the Gehrebach (entry, 1120m above sea level), about 50 min. from Zwieselbach.
Alternatively, without connecting the Gehrebach, you can walk directly in the Zwieselbach out to the parking lot.

Return: (machine translated)
In the Zwieselbach downhill, then right out onto the path and after reaching the tarred road left over the road bridge and to the car.

Only made Widdereggbach and walked back through Zwieselbach. Water level currently quite high. Canyon has some rappels through the water - but there is hardly any danger of water, as pools are not deep (even at the turning pool towards the exit) and you only hang fully in the stream in parts. Stands all okay, glued anchors, partly chain anchors. It took the two of us about 7 hours from car to car. (machine translated)

All stands ok, some with new glued anchors. Single and double hooks. Not too much wood. Long hiking routes. (machine translated)

All hooks ok. At the exit to the Gehrebach at the small saddle after the ridge erroneously followed the path down to the right and so somewhat laboriously in the creek bed up to the forest road. (machine translated)
