Resumen: (traducción alternativa)
Beautiful view of the Lech; upper part very open, lower part cut in the forest; many slippery places; mostly little water; many exit possibilities; short, steep ascent; exposure S/O; often still possible after precipitation; brittle sedimentary rock; standings good; Can be well combined with the Wiesbach near Stanzach; barbecue area at suspension bridge; catchment area about 1Km².

Hidrología:

Acceso: (traducción alternativa)
From Reutte to the village of Forchach. Turn right off the main road and drive to the industrial estate/sports ground. There is a large gravel parking place in front of the metal company.

Acceso: (traducción alternativa)
From the parking lot, walk past the sports field to the Lech. Cross the slightly swinging metal suspension bridge. Directly after the bridge you are already at the exit of the tour. From here, about 20m orographically to the left of the stream, steep climbing tracks lead up the sparse forest to a steep rock face. Hike around the rock face on the right until you reach a small steep passage with old wooden stamps. Shortly after the steep passage, you come to a forest road that leads to the left to a game feeding station. From here, the trail zigzags steeply uphill again over climbing tracks until you cross the open terrain to the stream (further ascent to the second forest road is not worthwhile).

Recorrido: (traducción alternativa)
After the steep access, the short tour offers a beautiful view of the Lech and two beautiful 25m abseils in the upper part of the canyon. After short walking terrain in the middle of the canyon, the lower part follows, which also has more slippery abseils in the vegetation-rich surroundings. The abseils (16-25m) follow each other without a long stretch before you reach the Lech cycle path.

Regreso: (traducción alternativa)
You can either get off at the cycle path at approx. 950m and follow the path over the suspension bridge back to the parking lot or you can continue down to the confluence with the Lech and cross the river to get back to the parking lot on the other side (watch out for the water level of the Lech!).

Access via the described path is very difficult. Not very rewarding overall. Schlotzrinne! (traducción alternativa)

Very slippery! Very little water, despite rain on the previous days. Quite a lot of wood in some places. Path also used via forest road & feeding station. (traducción alternativa)

Slightly higher water level due to previous rainfall, but no challenging sections as a result. Access via forest path is recommended. From the Futterkrippe camp site, ascend without a path. In the middle section there are trees lying across and in some places fences/makeshift bridges, so care should be taken when the water level is high. As of this year, a €5 parking fee is payable at the metal factory/sports ground. Photo shows water level in the area of the suspension rope bridge (exit) (traducción alternativa)

Next time we take the forest road to the feeding station as an access route (because of nettles and balsam), short rappel canyon with a fine view. (traducción alternativa)

Anchorages ok, many new, a few maillons are a little reddish. Little wood. Despite an intensive search, the access paths can no longer be found/exist. We had to go cross-country. You can hike under the rock face on the first part to the right until you reach the forest path or use a passage at https://goo.gl/maps/nMsGZA18N6DkiqnZ9 use. Then up through the fern field until you reach the road. Then turn left to the stream and orographically left of the stream (i.e. do not cross) up to the entry point. Photo: Checkpoint at the exit (directly behind the bridge) - low water level. (traducción alternativa)
