This access is a real pain. It took us roughly 3 hours, not only long and strenous, but also very exposed at places (esp. the final part where the remains of the long-gone hiking trail is to be found). Don't count with the 1:40 given here, it is probably the world record. The upper part is a equipped in a minimalist style, but as one goes down, it gets better, and the canyon itself gets more and more pretty. 2:30 hours till the start of the inferior, and concerning the conditions of the path, it is much more enjoyable to do the integrale, then exit here.

We descended the upper and lower parts of the canyon. At the access, despite the blue dots, attention is needed in some places, as animal tracks can mislead us and take up time. Overall, the access is not very problematic. Took 1:40h. The anchorages in the gorge are fine. In the lower part of the Pliza, a nut was missing on the 70m waterfall at the intermediate anchorage. It is OK now. It took us just under 4 hours to descend the upper and lower canyon. (traducción alternativa)
