Resumen: (traducción alternativa)
The tributary soon flows into the Bosco. The descent consists simply of following the river, with a few spots where you have to get out, through a fairly wide, quite beautiful canyon (with an impressive rock pillar on the right).

Hidrología: (traducción alternativa)
Hike along/by the river.

Acceso: (traducción alternativa)
From Cortina d'Ampezzo, take the SS51 toward Toblach.
After about 7 or 8 km, the road makes a sharp hairpin turn to the right; there are large parking lots along the road (entrance to the Ampezzo Dolomites Nature Park).
Continue on and park a little over 3 km further along, next to the church in Ospitale, across from a restaurant.

Acceso: (traducción alternativa)
From the parking lot, take hiking trail No. 203, which leads downhill, crosses the bike path and the Fellizon River, and then leads back uphill on the opposite slope (always follow the signs for "Val Padéon").
After a fairly steep climb, the trail runs across a long, flat stretch. It crosses a wide tributary of the Bosco via a sturdy bridge. Be sure to dress appropriately here.

Recorrido: (traducción alternativa)
The tributary soon flows into the Bosco. The descent consists solely of a river course with a few spots to get off in a fairly wide, quite beautiful canyon (with an imposing pillar on the right side).

There are no alternative routes, except for the long-distance hiking trail (GR) mentioned above.

The Bosco River formed the front line during World War I (numerous remnants of trenches can be seen on the hillsides along both banks).

Regreso: (traducción alternativa)
At the confluence with the Fellizon, you can easily follow the Fellizon all the way to the starting point, or turn right onto a GR hiking trail that crosses the torrent a few hundred meters before the confluence and also meets up with the starting point (at the base of the ascent).
