Résumé: (traduction alternative)
A canyon with little water flow in a rugged rocky landscape. The highlight is a 105-meter diagonal waterfall that is rappelled in three stages. Geologically interesting, but otherwise only for adventurous collectors. A neoprene shorty is usually sufficient.

Hydrologie:

Accès: (traduction alternative)
From Moggio or Pontebba, take the SP112 into the Aupa Valley and turn onto a narrow paved road at the signs for “Gialloz” and “Cjampiui.” Follow the road to a small parking area in front of a bridge.

Approche: (traduction alternative)
Follow the CAI 436 hiking trail to the self-catering hut “Ricovero Zouf di Fau” (water, stove, mattresses). Continue briefly on the forest road toward the northwest, then turn left into the forest. Continue northwest, crossing above the edge of the gorge, and descend into the forest canyon or rappel down from one of the trees.

Tour: (traduction alternative)
Due to the unstable rock, climbers often rappel from trees.

C 12m from the tree on the left
Climb around the 4m step on the right
Short walk
C 16m from the tree on the right
Downclimb
C 7m from the tree on the left
10-minute walk and downclimb to the high waterfall
C 30m rappel diagonally to the left from the tree using a sling and maillon. The next belay station is slightly offset to the left
C 60m from the tree on the left with a sling and carabiner
C 15m from the ring hook relatively high up on the left. You have to climb out of the short rock channel to the left

Retour: (traduction alternative)
Downclimb through the rocky streambed for 25 minutes to a dam, then ascend 30 hm to the left—largely off-trail—and then, on the flatter terrain above, cross southeast toward the hiking trail (a few cairns, faint trail marks). Return to the car via the hiking trail.

I think in midsummer when there is little water, the tour is also doable with alpine equipment. A little splash at the waterfalls is certainly a nice way to cool off. I liked the canyon, it's more of an adventure than canyoning. The final sequence is brilliant. (traduction alternative)
