Résumé: (traduction alternative)
A canyon that is rarely explored and has a difficult access, but is worth a descent in the middle of the season.

Hydrologie: (traduction alternative)
There is always water flowing in the lower section, while the upper section only has a good current at the beginning of the season.

Accès:

Approche: (traduction alternative)
After a good two-hour ascent, you reach an altitude of 1150 meters before beginning the descent and then descend to the riverbed at 1060 meters. The entrance amphitheater is of sublime beauty. Follow the path on the Tabacco as far as the Casera Avedinon and from there keep left, slightly uphill. At the fork in the path, turn right at 120° (be careful, danger of falling rocks!) and follow the path up to about 1150 meters. Following a faintly recognizable path near the ruins of the Casera, descend slowly until you reach the amphitheatre of the two springs below the Dou ridge. Entry is possible at about 900 meters, but leads over rocky ledges, some of which are quite exposed and overgrown.

Sufficient weapons, but in two rappels the small plates disappeared. On the first rappel we supplemented with plaque on 8 bolts. On the second missing, about halfway down on the left, you can use a tree to rappel 6-7 meters. Delightful views of the still snow-covered Nono group. (traduction alternative)
