Résumé: (traduction alternative)
No details
Not particularly interesting, but worth a quick stop if you have some time left after visiting the Vernèdes (just the lower part)

Hydrologie: (traduction alternative)
No operations outside of flood season.

Accès: (traduction alternative)
The Albagne is a stream that runs parallel to the Les Vernèdes stream. The Les Vernèdes flows into the Albagne before it reaches the village of Aumessas.
From the train station in the village of Aumessas, take the D299a. Before leaving the village, there is a hairpin turn to the right with a path on the left called “Le Cornier” (IGN map). Park in the parking lot at the exit of the path. This parking lot also serves as the starting point for the trail to Les Vernèdes.

Approche: (traduction alternative)
From the parking lot, turn left onto the path marked “Chemin des Cascades” or “Chemin botanique.” Follow the path uphill until you reach the first footbridge; pass it on your left and continue uphill to the right. You’ll come to a second footbridge, under which the “Ruisseau des Vernèdes” stream flows. Continue along the path uphill until you reach a fork: one path leads uphill to the right toward Les Vernèdes. The other path leads downhill to the left toward Vernes. Head toward Vernes. Two minutes later, you’ll reach a bridge with the Albagne flowing beneath it.

Tour: (traduction alternative)
Enter the water from the path. This is followed by a strenuous 1:40-hour hike over boulders with a series of short rappels at AN (max. height: 6 m). Everything is climbable. You then reach a platform with an anchor point in RD (chain). A handrail should be installed. Rappel 16 m. Then pass through a chute, followed by rappels of 9 m and 7 m on AN.
You’ll then reach a very beautiful pool. The exit is on the right bank at the end of the pool.
To avoid the arduous hike (1 hr 40 min) upstream: Once on the access trail, you’ll see (after about 20 min) the platform and the waterfall on the left. A small path branches off to the left and leads to the platform.

Retour: (traduction alternative)
At the exit of the stream, take the path that continues uphill. You’ll pass a building on your left. Continue on until you reach the bridge that crosses the “Ruisseau des Vernèdes” stream. Then follow the waterfall trail back downhill along the same route you took to get there.
