Résumé: (traduction alternative)
Very long and narrow canyon through dark slate. Known as "one of the most committing canyons" in New Zealand. The "Slot of Doom" part is a highlight.

Hydrologie:

Accès: (traduction alternative)
Queenstown -> Glenorchy -> Paradise/Diamond Lake -> Glenorchy-Paradise Rd until you cross the streambed (= just before the exit of the road/Chinaman's Bluff). Here you can park next to the road on the meadows.

Approche: (traduction alternative)
Water level: to check the water level, walk upstream from the parking lot for about 20 minutes until you reach a confluence.
Further access: in the middle between the two converging rivers, follow a path that is difficult to see up to the respective contour lines (entry "Les Haut": approx. 1300m, "Superiore": approx. 1050m, "Intermedio": approx. 900m and "Inferiore": approx. 800m). "Les Haut" is the only entry that can be reached on foot. For all other entries, you have to rappel into the streambed.
Access depending on the access height: 2-4h

Tour: (traduction alternative)
Times in the canyon depending on entry: "Les Haut" approx. 10h, "Superiore" approx. 8h, "Intermedio" approx. 7h, "Inferiore" approx. 4h.

Retour: (traduction alternative)
At approx. 600m, exit the stream to the left at a confluence and follow the access route back to the parking lot (approx. 2h).

A very cool tour for me as a rappel lover. Otherwise there was nothing special to note. (traduction alternative)

Access very difficult to find (pink loops hanging from the trees every few meters - walk along them). Very few emergency exits. Impressive canyon! The "exit" of the canyon was also hard to find, so we just followed the streambed to the parking lot. (traduction alternative)
