Résumé: (traduction alternative)

An attractive forest canyon, especially after rainfall. The highlight are two consecutive rappels, which are free-hanging and in front of a "grotto/cave".

The tour has only been set up in a makeshift manner! It is therefore best to take a drill with you and you may have to do some rappels over trees.

Hydrologie: (traduction alternative)

This stream usually carries little water. Particularly worthwhile after rainfall, when many other tours carry too much water.

Accès: (traduction alternative)

We drive from Kössen in the direction of St. Johann in Tirol on the Erpfendorfer Landstraße (L39) until the road crosses the Tiroler Ache/Großache. We can park our car in the parking lot right by the bridge.

Approche: (traduction alternative)

We walk along the forest road in the direction of Kössen until after approx. 1.3km a hiking trail on the left leads towards the mountain. We follow this along the Kalkgraben, which runs past on the right-hand side of the path. When the path exits at a stream (emergency exit of our tour), we cross it and follow the serpentine trail until we reach the stream again. When we reach the wooden ladder by the stream, we are in the right place and can climb in. The tour is only makeshift! It is therefore best to take a drill with you and you may have to do some rappels over trees.

Tour: (traduction alternative)

This is a rather dry, not very deep tour, which only carries water at certain times after heavy rain. The highlight of the tour are two consecutive rappels, each with a larger grotto/cave, where free-hanging rappels are used.

Retour: (traduction alternative)

The tour exits directly at the forest road next to the Tiroler Ache/Großache. We follow this road to the right for approx. 1.3 km until we reach the parking lot
