A short, fantastic, underrated canyon. Technically challenging; risk of rope snagging on the final rappel from the crevice. (traduction alternative)

A pretty, worthwhile little canyon. We walked up to the last "canyon house" of A Nöstrolcia and behind it we walked cross-country and quite steeply towards the canyon. At the end, we abseiled from a tree about 25m into the canyon and ended up below the 1st rappel, where you can climb up to the 1st belay. We assume that the better route must start somewhere near the 1st ruin, as an attempt was once made to build a socket at the confluence. Partly covered in algae, especially directly in the watercourse. We climbed the mousetrap on the rock on the left. Otherwise superiore conditions and a beautiful canyon. (traduction alternative)
