Résumé: (traduction alternative)
A short tour with few rappels, but with relatively high ones on average. The finale with the Zanzibar Slide really makes a canyoning enthusiast’s heart race once again.

Hydrologie: (traduction alternative)
A medium-sized watershed; the water recedes relatively quickly after rain, but it’s not a flash flood.

Accès: (traduction alternative)
At Rossa, park at the parking lot at the bottom of Calancasca.

Approche: (traduction alternative)
Follow the road up the embankment, then turn left onto the hiking trail. At 1270m, turn left again, and you’ll be right at the bridge for the lower part. Continue along the trail to the alp; the trail then veers left, but a path continues further into the valley to just above the first rappel point (1,360 m). From there, head down to the stream.

On the left side of the slope, it’s possible to climb back up to the slide; there’s an anchor there where you can attach a rope if you don’t want to slide all the way down from the top.

Retour: (traduction alternative)
Head down the slope on the right side of the mountain; there's a path there. Once you reach the playground, cross the water level check bridge and head back to the parking lot.

It's really clean right now. It's awesome that you can slide back up the Zanzibar Slide—it gives you the confidence to go a little higher each time. (traduction alternative)
