| Hydrologie:Check the water flow before entering the enclosed section because in the 40m rappel you will be exposed to nearly all the water and will get some beating   |                                    |                               |
| Accès:Drive up to the village „El Limon“, one car is parked at the village entrance, with other you cross the village and if you have high clearance or similar you put it down to the other parking spot (see gps). Otherwise there are also some spots where you could just park the car before going down the last bit of the gravel road to at least save some walking.                |                                    |                               |
| Approche:Go to the animal crossing on the village entrance and follow the fence trough the fields. Keep kind of the same level (and also check gps) with ending up going down at about 20min walking crossing a small stream. Then go uphill again and continue on the ridge to the right later when you already see the entrance crossing over to the left an scrambling down.            |                                    |                               |
| Tour:The canyon consists of quite a lot of small rappels and two big ones, one at the middle 40m and one at the end 35m. The water flow can be checked at the first rappel as you be quite exposed to the water at the 40m rappel.A few smaller rappels and jumps up to 15m40m rappel win the waterMore smaller rappels and some walkingFinal 35m rappel plus handline |                                    |                               |
| Retour:After the 35m rappel walk back on the right side, first following some small trail next to the water pipes. Later you reach some lemon trees, then you always follow the main gravel road back to the car.  |                                    |                               |

We were lucky enough to visit the canyon "later" (around 13:30 at the entry) as there were already a lot of people in the creek before us. This turned out to be a good thing as we had plenty of shade on the way back. During access, we had to search for the path several times even though there were many people in the stream before us that day. We also found a wasps' nest :-|. The first part of the tour is pretty good, it's all up to the high rappel, then a bit more walking until you come out at the last rappel. (traduction alternative)
