550m approach, very beautiful canyon. Third anchor very high. Otherwise everything was fine. Long way out via scree ramp which becomes very steep at the bottom and is unpleasant to walk due to the large boulders. (traduzione alternativa)

Possible plan B when it has rained a lot. Most gravel is diverted into a neighbour gully. Solid compact rock. Home to local gemse. Unfortunately the canyon is too short. Done with e-bike partially.

Water level increased after several days of (heavy) rain (snowfall from 1200 m). Full neoprene required! Anchor points are all okay, even if there is room for improvement in terms of rope friction. Unfortunately, the tour comes at the price of a much too long approach and an equally long return. You climb a good 300 vertical meters to the exit and logically also descend again afterwards. All the water actually seeps away in the wide gravel bed on the way back. (traduzione alternativa)

Beautiful canyon. The second anchor is quite high, but all in all really well bolted. All anchors are quite new.

On the ascent, the amount of water at the exit seemed extremely small. And that despite a lot of rain during the night and now still a little drizzle. After the steep ascent, however, we were proved wrong at the top: the stream had more water than we had expected. It was great fun, the installation was good. As we were not yet a well-rehearsed canyoning team, it took us just under 4 hours in total (2 hours of which were in the canyon). (traduzione alternativa)

Great alternative after rain! Drilled a new bolt for the rope railing for the 3rd abseil (from the top; 26m). Good cell phone reception in the gorge. (traduzione alternativa)
