Short abseil slope in the forest, tolerates a lot of water

Idrologia: (traduzione alternativa)
The stream normally carries little water and abseiling points are positioned so that you can walk even when there is a lot of water. You can escape into the forest to the right or left at any time.

Accesso: (traduzione alternativa)
Option 1: Drive to Lofer and park there

Option 2:
First drive to Lofer, then take the mountain road in the village to the Loferer Alm and park there before the start of the toll road at Gasthof Loderbichl. There are only a few parking spaces there, we were asked to park in front of the fence at a right angle to the fence and not to use the signposted parking spaces above.

Avvicinamento: (traduzione alternativa)
Recommendation: Park at the cable car in Lofer and take the Almbahn I and Almbahn II up to the Lofer Alm. From there, follow the waterfall path until the path meets the stream.

Alternatively:
From Gasthof Loderbichl, follow the "Wasserfallweg" in the direction of Bimalm. The trail initially follows the toll road and later turns right towards Würmbach. At a junction of two field paths, you have to stay on the waterfall path at the top and not go down towards Klausmaisalm. The path passes a waterfall, then another 2-3 minutes and you will find the entry point at two pools. You can also continue to the bridge, but this part is not worthwhile.

Giro: (traduzione alternativa)
Cool down in the pool, then first rappel single bolt left with 4m. Short walking passages, then anchors hidden in the middle in front of the hole, then chain anchors on the left and over the tourist waterfall. Then comes a short downclimb and the only deep pool of the tour (jump 2-3m possible). This is followed by the rappel highway with 20/25 rappels, some with single hooks, some from tree slings (see topographic view for details). The penultimate rappel is a 45m, followed by another 20m. Then you walk along the stream for about 150m until you climb up to the meadows on the right.

Supposedly there is also a lower part which is not so beautiful...

Ritorno: (traduzione alternativa)
About 150m after the last rappel, you can see the meadow on the top right to which you climb up, then you go up towards the alpine pasture and soon see a house behind which the gravel path leads back to the hiking trail and from there back to the car. We tried the wild crossing without the gravel path but it is not recommended because of the ditches in between.

Since most steps are 20–25 meters, 50-meter ropes are the most effective (in our estimation, the longest step is actually closer to 35 meters). We preferred the alternative route starting from the Gasthof Loderbichl parking lot (just a short drive up from town, then a 35-minute walk to the entry; we saved money on the lift and stopped by the inn for a drink after the climb :-)) Abseil points corrected to 12 (see topographic view under “Internal”). Drilled 1 new bolt. Overall, the route is adequately protected (I would only recommend drilling two new anchors in the middle at abseil point No. 7 instead of using the single bolt on the right, for rope retrival). During our ascent, there were only a few slippery spots. 3–4 mm neoprene is usually sufficient. (traduzione alternativa)

We took the Almbahn I and Almbahn II from Lofer up to the Lofer Alm. The total journey time is approx. 22 minutes. From there, the well-signposted waterfall trail leads directly to the stream, the first anchor point is clearly visible from the hiking trail. A very average canyon, with occasionally very beautiful views of the mountain landscape. The anchors are rather moderate, but we always found something. The previous 2x50m rope indication is strange - at the longest point the center mark of our 50m ropes was about 10m from the next anchor, so a 70m rope would probably have been enough twice - I suspect that you could possibly get by with 35m ropes - but to be on the safe side, take a longer rope with you as long as no one else confirms this statement. Very slippery, cool rappel, well set up at least at the beginning towards the exit but not ok! Access from the upper parking lot, then relaxed with the gondola up and then about 25 min hiking back after the beautiful final waterfall 45+25m (traduzione alternativa)

In heavy local rain can rise quickly, whereby escape is always possible. In fine weather quite beautiful and almost dry abseil gorge with mountain views. Broken off at the long rappel due to water slope (see photo) (traduzione alternativa)

Inspection was OK. Chains do not look standardized, at the last stand only one anchor is fixed instead of two, if necessary take a nut and wrench with you. Next time take the way back via Klausmaisalm instead of the forest. (traduzione alternativa)
